It hosts several festivals throughout the year – most notably, culinary, music and film festivals. SLICE OF THE CITY

A City for Discovery

There's a vitality about Cork. Being named the European City of Culture in 2005 kickstarted a true transformation of the city centre, restoring much of its natural charm. Cork has a real sense of itself. It's Ireland's second city and very proud. It has two newspapers, two stouts (Beamish and Murphys, and yes, they taste very different to Guinness) and is also home to Barry's Tea, which has cult-like status (when Cork people go on holiday, they take Barry's with them).

Cork is also a major European Tech, Pharma and R&D centre with its own 'Silicon Valley' playing and host to many large multi-national companies. At the same time, much of the city's old grandeur has been faithfully retained, and nostalgia for a past era comes to life along walks on the handsome Grand Parade or through the Docklands area, where stunningly beautiful old merchant houses pave the way.

The area around Cork attracted lots of artists and alternative types in the '60s and '70s and as a result it has a distinctly European sensibility. Cork people love sitting with a coffee in one of the many great local cafes for a chat, to read a book or watch the world go by.

Cork was a prominent port in the 19th century. Today it is the second largest natural harbour in the world, exporting agricultural goods and importing exotic spices from across the globe. You can get a flavour of that significance at the English Market – the key place to find contemporary food trends, with fantastic produce from the nearby fields and ocean. The city has maintained a strong reputation for food and in particular the foods produced by small artisan producers. Surrounded by farming country, Cork has always been known for the quality of its food, as the Butter Museum in Shandon testifies.

Then there are the various excellent cafés and restaurants. Try The Farmgate Restaurant in the mezzanine of this 18th century English Market and if you're feeling traditional and intrepid, try the Drisheen or Black Pudding.

There's also plenty of art to take in in Cork. Close to The River Lee you'll find the Lewis Glucksman Gallery and the Crawford Art Gallery. And of course the city is well-known for its traditional music (try Dennehy's and Counihan's) while also having a strong feeling for contemporary music. One would venture that you'll find a quality performance somewhere in town every night.

Ultimately, though, what's really lovely about Cork is that it doesn't manage its visitors. It's a city for discovery.
